

Career Advisor – What Are You Doing To Earn More Money?

Professional athletes don't negotiate their own deals – neither should you. After all, you wouldn't buy a house without using a real estate agent to help you with the negotiations, so why are you letting yourself leave money on the table when it comes to your career?

According to Robert Half, only 39% of people even attempt to negotiate for a higher salary or better benefits. If you're one of those people who doesn't negotiate, or doesn't know how to negotiate effectively, you could be leaving thousands of dollars on the table every year!

What's CRAZY is that if you negotiate, you have an 85% likelihood of earning a higher salary.

Three reasons why you should give Career Advisor a try:

- Receive More Job Offers Through Targeted Interview Tactics

Maybe the reason you don't negotiate is because you aren't getting many job offers. The trick with any negotiation is being able to walk away whenever you want. Think about it like this, if there are two jobs you're equally interested in, and you have active offers for both, you're willing to negotiate hard because you have a plan B.

Unfortunately, most people have NO IDEA how to effectively interview. Bottom line, if you're not presenting your value effectively, you are missing out on lucrative opportunities. Hiring decision makers choose candidates based on the ability of the candidate to articulate his/her value to the hiring decision maker's company. Have you created a value statement? Do you know how to use STAR? Have you created an effective R to Q. If not, you're simply not interviewing effectively.
